

James R. Dudine

James Dudine is a former senior executive with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) with over thirty years experience as a financial institution supervisor. During the Savings and Loan Crisis of the late 1980's and early 1990's, Mr. Dudine served as the Director of the Office of Investigations for the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC).

The RTC was a temporary agency created by Congress in 1989 to clean up the savings and loan crisis after the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Fund became insolvent. It acted as conservator and receiver for failed thrift institutions, marketing the franchises and disposing of assets. The RTC was also directed to investigate each failed thrift institution to determine the extent of malfeasance and to bring civil recovery proceedings against directors, officers and other professionals whose misconduct caused losses to the taxpayers.

Mr. Dudine initiated and directed the RTC's nationwide investigative program establishing national policy and overseeing regional and field staff located throughout the country. The highly successful effort returned over $2.5 billion to the US Treasury.

Mr. Dudine has testified before Congress on several occasions and before the RTC's Oversight Board. During his career, he worked diligently to promote information sharing among Federal regulatory authorities, the US Department of Justice, FBI and US Treasury resulting in the successful coordination of parallel civil and criminal recovery proceedings.

Mr. Dudine holds an MBA from Southern Illinois University and a BS degree from Indiana State University. He is a graduate of the Stonier Graduate School of Banking, Rutgers University.